

Values Relating to Inservice Training for People Working With Children (0-5)

Anticipated outcomes are clear and understandable.

Learning opportunities are provided in multiple learning formats to foster growth for all adult learners.

Information sharing and networking among participants acknowledges their positive contributions to the learning process.

Family members are actively included as presenters and participants.

Inclusion of interagency and interdisciplinary participants is facilitated.

Collaborative training among agencies is actively sought to maximize resources.

Professional development is a continuing process rather than a discrete activity, and is viewed within the context of life-long learning.

KITS is supported through grants from the Kansas State Department of Education #21004 and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

The logo for KITS (Kansas Inservice Training System) features the word "KITS" in large, stylized, teal letters. Above it, the words "inservice training system" are written in a smaller, teal, sans-serif font. The background is a light yellow-green gradient. Three small photographs are integrated into the design: a young child reading a book, a woman holding a baby, and a young child smiling. The overall aesthetic is clean and professional, emphasizing early childhood education.
